Allegations of teacher-student sex render officials 'repulsed'

Abuse of a child. School and city officials said they were "repulsed and angry" by the actions perpetrated upon a 13-year-old.

A female Somerville school teacher was arrested Wednesday on charges of having a sexual relationship with a 13-year-old.

Alexandra Romanos, 41, of Stoneham, pleaded not guilty during her arraignment Wednesday to charges of aggravated rape of a child and indecent assault and battery on a child, according to the Middlesex district attorney's office. She was ordered held on $50,000 bail.

School officials were made aware of the inappropriate relationship by a parent who reported it at the end of June, officials said. During an investigation by authorities, it was discovered that Romanos, a teacher at East Somerville Community School, allegedly initiated a sexual relationship with the teen. The relationship took place on and off school grounds, authorities said.

"The safety and well-being of our students is always our highest priority, so it is all the more disturbing that a teacher — the very individual most entrusted to ensure that safety on a daily basis — has allegedly blatantly violated that trust," Mayor Joseph Curtatone said in a statement. "I commend the parent who took the right step in reporting this to school officials. ... We will continue to cooperate with the D.A.'s investigation in any way needed."

Romanos, a teacher in Somerville for nearly seven years, was placed on administrative leave from the school.

"Nothing we can say will soften the impact that such news has on a community, particularly one as dedicated to nurturing and supporting our youth as Somerville," Superintendent of Schools Tony Pierantozzi said in a joint statement with Curtatone. "We are repulsed and angry that someone who made an oath to uphold the highest moral standards in the execution of her responsibilities as a teacher and a role model has allegedly blatantly violated that trust."

Calls placed to numbers listed for Romanos' home went unanswered. A message left for her lawyer was not returned by press time.

Quoted

"These are very distressing allegations. The idea that a teacher would use [his or her] position of authority to manipulate an impressionable young teenager is unsettling and alarming."

July 3. Esplanade fireworks moved to Thursday due to approaching storm

Forecasted thunderstorms have moved the city's annual Boston Pops Fireworks Spectacular on the Esplanade to Thursday, one day before the celebration was scheduled to take place.

"We've enjoyed a nice summer so far, and then here we are on the Fourth of July confronting two days of bad weather," said Massachusetts State Police Colonel Timothy P. Alben at a news conference Wednesday.

Plans could still change depending on Thursday's forecast, Alben said.

The concert will happen Thursday no matter what, due to contractual obligations, though there is a possibility that the fireworks could be pushed to Saturday if rain descends on the city Thursday.

Visit Metro.us for a map of places to watch the fireworks celebration.

Quoted

"We know there are predictions for rain [Thursday], and we're going to ride through that as best as we can."

Alben

"In our latest briefing from the National Weather Service we think that out of the next two days [Thursday] provides us the best opportunity to get the music, the show and the fireworks off," said Alben. "We know there are predictions for rain [Thursday] and we're going to ride through that as best as we can."

There will be no festivities on the Esplanade Friday, police said.

Tropical Storm Arthur is expected to travel from the southeast toward New England, according to the National Hurricane Center. Though it isn't expected to slam Massachusetts, the region is expected to experience wind and rain through Friday.

Cambridge man arrested for public urination on T

A man who was playing music at the Harvard Square MBTA station was ejected by police on Tuesday after being photographed allegedly urinating in a cup on the platform.

The 50-year-old Cambridge man, who police did not name, was reported by someone who followed the MBTA's "See something? Say something" campaign.

Transit Police did not specify his charges, but said he was ejected from the station and will have a future day in court.

Police said he was not properly permitted to play music on the T. METRO

Gaming panel rejects Walsh's delay request

The Massachusetts Gaming Commission on Wednesday dealt a blow to Mayor Marty Walsh and rejected his request that the commission delay awarding a license to either proposed casino bordering Boston until after a November ballot initiative.

Commissioners voted unanimously during a meeting to deny the delay request. It means the commission will move forward with its goal of deciding which, if any, proposed billion-dollar resort casino gets the Greater Boston area license. The commission anticipates to award the license in late August or September. METRO

Survey. Boston ranks among best cities in US

Consider yourself lucky, Bostonians.

A new survey of the travel magazine's readers released on Wednesday puts Boston as No. 10 on the "best city" list for America and Canada. Charleston, South Carolina, topped the list, as it did in 2013. Boston placed below other cities like Vancouver [sixth], San Francisco [fourth] and New York [ninth].

The Hub wasn't the only city entity to rank near the top of the magazine's survey. The XV Beacon and Eliot Hotel ranked sixth and 10th, respectively, on the list of the best small city hotels in the U.S.

Also, Boston's Mandarin Oriental ranked tenth on the list of the best large city hotels in the U.S.

The magazine's readers were asked from December through March to rank cities based on five characteristics: sights/landmarks, culture/arts, restaurants/food, people and value. MICHAEL NAUGHTON

Buffer zone ruling spurs abortion clinic safety bill

The Supreme Court rejected the state's 35-foot buffer zone in front of abortion clinics. / NICOLAUS CZARNECKI, METRO

Crossing the line. A new bill aims to strengthen security around Massachusetts abortion clinics.

State legislators said a bill that would protect women entering clinics while respecting the rights of anti-abortion protesters could be on the governor's desk by the end of the month.

The bill comes in response to a unanimous Supreme Court ruling striking down a 35-foot buffer zone outside women's health clinics on the grounds that it violates freedom of speech.

Under the bill, police would get more power to disperse crowds, clinic driveways would be protected and protections included in the federal Freedom of Access to Clinic Entrances Act could be adopted on the state level, Attorney General Martha Coakley said.

Planned Parenthood League of Massachusetts President Marty Walz on Wednesday recalled a "terrifying" pre-buffer zone experience with a male protester who was screaming at her inches away from her face.

"That protester was back at our doorway Saturday morning, just the way it was in 2007, scaring our patients and scaring our staff," Walz said.

Private job gains in June

U.S. private-sector hiring hit a 1.5-year high in June, reinforcing views that momentum was building to carry the economy through the rest of the year after a dismal start.

The report from payrolls processor ADP added to other bullish data ranging from manufacturing to auto sales that has suggested the economy has bounced back after a first-quarter slump.

Private employers added 281,000 workers to payrolls last month, up from 179,000 in May, ADP said. The hike was the largest since November 2012. REUTERS

5 SECONDS OF SUMMER

TIE

1 'Fancy'

Iggy Azalea featuring Charli XCX

2 'Problem'

Ariana Grande featuring Iggy Azalea
Just like Pharrell Williams in the summer of 2013, Iggy Azalea has her hands in two separate collaborations that are vying for the Song of the Summer title. "Fancy" pairs her with Charli XCX — who wrote a previous summer hit, Icona Pop's "I Love It" — for a super sing-along chorus and words that are the very stuff that Lorde successfully made fun of on last year's "Royals." And though "Problems" is a showcase for Ariana Grande, Iggy Iggs gets some good rhymes off. Big Sean gets an odd star turn here too, whispering "one less problem without you" against a deep sub-bass boom.

3 'Turn Down for What'

DJ Snake & Lil Jon
There are only 12 words in this song, said over and over in Lil Jon's inimitable voice.

4 'Sing'

Ed Sheeran
This red-haired Brit has out-JTed Justin Timberlake with this something-for-everyone song. He gets sultry against a jazzy acoustic strum, gives one of the catchiest "oh ohh ohh" choruses since Arcade Fire and he raps about weed and tequila, all in a charming accent.

5 'Talk Dirty'

Jason Derulo featuring 2 Chainz
Jason Derulo singing about lipstick stains on his passport, 2 Chainz using high school health class terms to rap about "international oral sex" and the snake charmer sax riff make for a combo so ridiculous that it could easily be mistaken for an Andy Samberg SNL Digital Short, which is also why it's awesome.

6 'Good Kisser'

Usher
Jason Derulo isn't the only one bragging about traveling the world and doing things with his mouth with the people he's met. Usher channels his inner Prince over a fat, stumbling bassline in this tune, which will inevitably segue into the Purple One's 1986 summer hall of famer, "Kiss."

Visit Metro.us to download a free summer mix for your barbecue.

7 'Do It Again'

Royksopp & Robyn
No longer dancing on her own, our favorite Swedish nymph is now working with a pair of Norwegian producers who have given her material a colder edge.

8 'Money on My Mind'

Sam Smith
At first listen Sam Smith might sound like sound like the type of act you'd laugh at on a local cable access talent show, but soon enough you'll be raving to your friends how Sam Smith is the male version of Adele.

9 'Summer'

Calvin Harris
Who'd've thunk a few years ago that DJs singing on their own songs would be a good thing? Though the title feels like an attempt to stage a coup on the Song of the Summer honor, there's something underneath the surface that hints at this season's temperance. The leaves turn brown and the subject of the song lied to the guy who once found love in a hopeless place.

10 'Come Get It Bae'

Pharrell Williams
Two-time 2013 Song of the Summer champ Pharrell Williams tosses his oversized ranger hat into the ring for the 2014 title with this Earth, Wind and Fire-y follow-up to the spring's ubiquitous "Happy."

11 'Chandelier'

Sia
Sia sounds like Rihanna, if Rihanna could actually sing. She belts out the carpe diem chorus so strongly that it's guaranteed to inspire some off-key versions come "American Idol" tryouts.

12 'Pills N Potions'

Nicki Minaj
"Super Bass" was a 2011 contender for Song of the Summer and "Starships" was a dominating force on the charts in summer of 2012. This return is definitely a subdued effort, but it's summer and it's Nicki Minaj, so you need her on your mix.

'She Looks So Perfect'

5 Seconds of Summer
These punky poppers from Down Under singing about how hot a girl looks in American Apparel underwear are basically this summer's Hot Chelle Rae. You don't remember them? Exactly. That doesn't mean you can't dig it now.

Holiday plans: Go Fourth and picnic

Food. Be smarter than the average bear and let someone else prep your feast.

Make sure to check the forecast — if the weather isn't cooperating, look at event websites for rescheduling information. / ARTISAN BISTRO

The Fourth of July is an ideal time to take a break from your overly air-conditioned office and dine in the great outdoors (if the weather holds, that is). Good thing local eateries offer prepackaged picnic baskets. Get some fresh air, see some fireworks and eat a sandwich near some squirrels. Four of Boston's great picnic providers explain how to do it in style. Some of the options do require 24 hours' notice, so be prepared to alter your choices depending on whether the weather moves Boston's celebration.

The Artisan Bistro at the Ritz-Carlton

Ritz-Carlton executive chef Andrew Yeo says this year's baskets offer good options for locavores. That includes beef wraps with beef from Maine's Archer's Angus Farms, locally sourced produce and the picnic menu's top seller, Foley Seafood mini-lobster tacos. Each souvenir picnic tote bag comes with two sandwiches, salads, sides and desserts. $85-$125, requires 24-hour notice; 617-574-7176, 10 Avery St.

Beacon Hill Bistro at the Beacon Hill Hotel

Beacon Hill Bistro will put anything on its menu into its picnic baskets. Executive Chef Lucas Sousa suggests you let them pack you something refreshing, such as chilled cucumber fennel soup or strawberry rhubarb salad. Or try something you can only do from a bistro steps away from a Boston Common picnic ground — a raw oyster picnic. "It's not something I would do if I was traveling too far," he says. "But who doesn't love oysters?" Menu prices, requires one-hour notice. 617-723-7575, 25 Charles St.

Tasty Burger

Tasty Burger's picnic delivery service operates out of its Harvard Square location, but Southie residents have been getting unofficial Tasty Burger picnics delivered to the L and M Street Beaches for a year. The service offers a souvenir tote bag for other picnic necessities. "Picnics are different things to different people," says Tasty Burger co-owner Brian Reyelt. "For some people it's a baguette, cheese and salumi. For me, it's a gorgonzola burger." $11 per person, minimum two people; 617-425-4444, 40 JFK St., Cambridge

Trust the experts

Central Bottle

With a cured-meat selection second to none, a full spectrum of cheeses and plenty of wine options, Central Bottle doesn't need a prefilled basket to be an ideal picnic depot. What their rentals offer is the chance to fill the basket with a proud tradition of carefully selected products. Central Bottle is confident enough to only sell one brand each of chocolate, olive oil and bread. "Selecting a perfect basket was easy," says owner Liz Vilardi. "We've been selecting things for 14 years." For the prefab basket, they've gone with a traditional salumi picnic including local cheeses, a saucisson sec, a baguette of their best bread and a bar of best chocolate. $75, requires 24-hour notice. 617-225-0040; 196 Massachusetts Ave., Cambridge

RADIUS-TWC

Dystopian thriller. This star-studded South Korean import arrives overseas quietly, receiving a modest release in America. It deserves better.

1 It's a big movie. "Snowpiercer" isn't a mere specialty foreign release; it's a mainstream film. Not only that, it's a big movie with big familiar-to-America stars. It's 2031, and due to a reckless attempt to stop climate change the world has frozen over. Those who survived live aboard a train plowing around the world in a giant circle, which unfortunately is segmented into class: The rich and bored up front, the downtrodden and near-feral in the back. "Captain America" star Chris Evans leads the latest attempt to fight the way to the front.

2 It was a hit everywhere else. It's "only" the 10th highest-grossing homemade South Korean film in history. No. 1 is the monster movie "The Host," also by "Snowpiercer" director Bong Joon-ho. This is an alternate universe blockbuster, albeit one that was famously mistreated by distributor Harvey Weinstein, who nearly released a cut that hacked out 20 minutes. Improbably, sense prevailed.

3 It masterfully mixes tone. Bong has a goofy sense of humor, but he also loves to take his films to dark places. "Snowpiercer" is a very funny satire, especially as Evans and cast progress through cars, each one a surprise that often radically changes the color scheme. Tilda Swinton is also on hand to steal the movie as one of the heartless baddies. At the same time, it's fearless and brutal, routinely picking off characters nice and evil.

Sounding off

It's genuinely angry

4 Bong is right there with the poor, who aren't even poor — they have absolutely nothing outside the meager miseries they're given. He actually lays out class sideways, one section at a time, so that by the time you get to the people lounging in Jacuzzis or clubbing, it's impossible to avoid the outrage of us — that is, all of us wasting our lives on Internet time-sucks — living as though the genuinely down-trodden don't somewhere exist.

Review

'Life Itself'

How does one review a film about the most famous film critic of all? The task would be harder if it wasn't very good. "Life Itself" is a documentary about the late Roger Ebert and his final months before his passing last spring. Like Ebert's prolific writing, it makes its subject universal. As promised by its title, it's a downright cosmic look at existence even as it stays strictly personal.

Although the film covers Ebert's life in great detail and with a celebratory air, it's not afraid to delve into his lows. Chief among these are the '70s, when Ebert would wrap up the day's writing and then head out for all-night drinking binges. This period is still shown as fun, but also as the kind of freewheeling living that eventually becomes a drag.

Director Steve James (of "Hoop Dreams," which Ebert championed 20 years back) gets a lot out of toggling between straight-up exposition about Ebert's life and hanging with he and his wife, Chaz, as they prepare for the worst. These modern-day scenes have great power, observing as a materialist — who fully expected to return to the nothing from which he came — grapples with the notion that his consciousness will soon disappear. It will make you cry like a baby.

Online dating is a dirty little lie: Part 2

According to brokerage company ConvergEx Group, the typical dating site customer spends an average $239 every year in their quest to find love — just under $20 a month. If those monthly subscribers were to find love quickly, they wouldn't stay subscribed to the site very long. But if the site is doing its job, why would anyone have to spend $239 over 12 months to find someone with whom they click?

www.theproblemismen.com

Charles J. Orlando is a relationship expert and author of the best-selling book series "The Problem with Women ... Is Men." Find out more about him on his website, or visit him on Facebook for real-world love advice.

Metro does not endorse the opinions of the author.

Like some people you meet online, Internet dating isn't all it's cracked up to be. Here's part two of my investigation into what really happens in the realm of online dating.

A predatory environment

If you think your night club is the quintessential "meat market," you ain't seen nothin' yet. The online dating world is fraught with pick-up artists. I interviewed 50 men who use online dating sites to meet women. Here's a sample:

From G.S. in New York: "Maybe they want a relationship, so I tell them I want one, too. ... It doesn't matter what I say, because once I get in there, I probably won't see her again."

From E.B. in Chicago: "It usually only takes me a short email to get her interested. From there, I just pour on the charm. A smile, a little shy attitude over coffee, and she's mine."

This type of man tends to send emails out to lots of women — with the end goal of having sex.

For exclusive commentary, visit Metro.us/blogs.

Up: After a mother in Ottawa, Canada, was scolded by a customer for nursing her baby inside a Starbucks, a young male barista came to her defense.

Down: World Cup Sex Ban. Bosnia, Russia, Chile and Mexico were all under orders not to have sex during the World Cup — and they are all out of the running.

Consider the financial operations of online dating sites

The business of online dating is business, not love. Don't say I didn't warn you.

The longer a dating site can keep you unmatched, the more it can profit.

My opinion? Any time you put people on one side, and the potential of love on the other, you will find someone in the middle with their greedy little paws out. (See more about this to the left.)

What we're into this week

Romantic comedies are pervasive in our society. But from Disney to "Pretty Woman," they are setting an unreachable goal for love. Learn more at www.goodmenproject.com.

Porn is fine as adult entertainment, but it's not sex education — and for many men, that's what's unfortunately happening.

An unexpected break-up not only affects your sense of self-worth, it makes you wonder how long they were just going through the motions.

GETTING DOWN TO BRASS TACKS WITH BRASS UNION

For years, the Precinct space in Somerville's Union Square was a bit of an afterthought for me, with so many quality drinking destinations having opened nearby. That's changed with the revamped Brass Union. The re-imagining of the space (from the owners of the Independent, Saloon and the soon to open River Bar in Assembly Row) now fits the expectations of the contemporary drinker.

Like before, the room is separated into two areas. The front room looks like what you might call an old New York-style tavern, with dark woods, distressed mirrors and low light. The back room has been transformed into a sort of rec room, with board games, shuffle board, a table-top video game and a lounge feel.

More importantly, the food and drink offerings have been brought up to date by chef Jonathan Kopacz and bar man Paulo Pereira.

"I think when it comes to the cocktail program, especially, we really stepped it up a bit from what it was before," Pereira says. "I was given a lot of freedom when it came to running the list to be as creative as I wanted to, to make as much house-made syrups and sodas as I could. I really wanted to make it for everybody. It's all over the board, from approachable, easy drinking to sweet. Then there are really spirit-forward cocktails."

One such spirit-forward cocktail is Satchmo's Slur, made with Old Overholt rye, Lillet Blanc, Cynar, orange bitters, and Herbsaint absinthe. It's bracing, bright and fragrant. Others take a more experimental bent, like the Rum and Smoke, made with Bully Boy Aged rum, smoked lime juice, orgeat and Ginjinha.

"That drink is quickly becoming our most popular. People read it on the menu and haven't seen anything like it before," he says. To make the lime juice, he smokes the limes for an hour or two before juicing.

More playful concoctions include the Jumpman Julep, made with tequila, fresh pineapple, orange and pomegranate juices and agave nectar, and topped with coconut foam and a grilled pineapple spear.

'Everybody Talks'

Turning heads. Neon Trees front man Tyler Glenn says coming out has led to their new album having more depth with fans.

Neon Trees front man Tyler Glenn has never shied away from being himself on stage, but with the release of a new album, "Pop Psychology," he decided it was time to open up a bit more about his private life. In April, he came out as gay via a Rolling Stone interview. And not only gay, but a gay Mormon, an unusual combination in pop culture. It capped a rough period in Glenn's life, where he was having trouble keeping his cool on stage. With the help of a therapist and a supportive producer, Glenn decided it was time to tell the world what he'd been hiding.

Glenn actually only started coming out to people in his life during the tail end of the production of "Pop Psychology." After working with producer Tim Pagnotta on finishing the album, Pagnotta expressed some curiosity about what the new songs were about, and Glenn decided to share his secret.

"I think his reaction inspired me to tell everyone else because he responded in such a loving, almost congratulatory way, which was really something I never put together with being gay," says Glenn.

That said, he's pleased to be a spokesman for equality for people who are both gay and religious. "A lot of the time we see in the media, like, it's either religion or it's being gay, and I think the two can live in the same sphere," says Glenn.

Asked if he thinks it's important for public figures to come out, Glenn replies honestly, "I used to not. I get people doing it on their own time, in their own way, and I don't know everyone's situation, but I do think it's important."

Of course, his news has "turned a lot of heads in Utah," where Glenn lives, but he says he's happy to be an exemplar on this front, despite some discomfort with the idea in the past: "I'm really glad that some people feel like they have a voice now, and ... if that's the role model I can be, then I'm comfortable with that."

B sides

Honesty in songwriting

For those wondering if Glenn was trying to hide something on prior records, he says he thinks the older songs are honest representations of who he was at the time. In the song "Teenage Sounds" off the band's second record, "Picture Show," the lyric "I'm sick of being called a fag because I'm queer" once reflected people's reactions to his flamboyant style of dress. "Now that means more to me, and I think it [also] means more to [other] people," he says.

Constitution doesn't protect pursuit of pleasure

Dr. Rubin asks what will be the end result of cutting abortion and contraception access. Less casual sex and more committed relationships, if not more marriage, perhaps? While some women may rely on birth control for health reasons other than pregnancy prevention or termination, this is not the type of health care employers are conscientiously concerned about. Besides, while freedom of religion is a federally recognized and protected right, freedom to have sex without consequences is a right no one can grant to anyone.

Nothing sacred about case

Re: 'Religious choice wins in court' (Metro, July 1) Your editorial bias is showing. How else can we explain Tuesday's front page? The so-called Christians at the center of the case violated their own religion simply by bringing the case. At least the interior headline on page 6 was closer to the mark with "Employers win." And that's what this is really about: five activist judges firing another salvo in the class war and the Republican war on women.

It's not a sin to compromise

Re: 'Don't give 'em an inch' (Metro, June 30) Chuck Fazio has fallen for the fallacy that there can be no gun legislation, at all, without the infringement of Second Amendment rights. This is simply not the case, and ignores the spirit of the original law. Perhaps if gun rights advocates stopped parroting the positions of the gun manufacturers, we could have some useful legislation. "Uncompromising" is not a compliment — it is a curse. Laser show must go on for Red Sox

MLB. Dustin Pedroia's 2014 season is going a lot like his 2012 season, and that's not a good thing.

If the 2014 Red Sox are to mimic the 2012 Red Sox and ultimately finish over 20 games out of a playoff spot, rest assured there will be no late season purging of superstar, big-money players this time around.

Guggenheim Baseball Management (the group that owns the LA Dodgers, with Magic Johnson as its figurehead) would no doubt be salivating over the likes of Sox second baseman Dustin Pedroia right now if they were in their 2012 operating mode. Pedroia is, after all, a big baseball name and has a juicy long-term contract. The Sox inked Pedroia to a $100 million deal last summer that is supposed to keep the four-time All-Star on Yawkey Way through 2021.

Now, it's a stretch to say the Sox are "stuck" with Pedroia, but there's no doubt that that contract looks a world less appealing than it did one year ago in the feel-good summer of 2013.

Through 84 games this season, Pedroia is batting .277 with an on-base percentage of .346 and a slugging percentage of .383. Through 84 games last season, Pedroia was batting .322 with an OBP of .404 and a slugging mark of .441.

Pedroia's numbers this season look similar to his numbers in 2012. Through 84 games in that nightmarish Sox campaign, Pedroia hit .265 with an OBP of .324 and a slugging percentage of .394.

Pedroia will likely never bang out over 20 home runs again like he did in 2011 as he has just four dingers this season. But his home run marks this year are consistent with where he was at midway through the 2013 and 2012 seasons and the low power numbers aren't what's worrying people. It's the fact that Pedroia often looks overmatched at the plate and his low batting average that has Sox fans grimacing.

Can Pedroia turn things around this season? Absolutely. He has three three-hit games in the past week, has looked more comfortable during his at-bats recently and it finally seems as though the sore left wrist that hampered him during the early portion of the season is something close to a nonissue.

Dustin Pedroia is batting .277 this season, and his subpar numbers are a big reason why the Red Sox are slumping. / BOSTON GLOBE

Back-loaded backcourt

Celtics' roster in flux with re-signing of guard Bradley

The 2014-15 Celtics roster is far from finished, but at this juncture it appears president of basketball operations Danny Ainge believes he can win big by going small.

The Celtics agreed to a new contract with guard Avery Bradley this week. The deal is worth a reported $32 million over four years.

The move was questioned by many basketball minds on two fronts.

First, the Celtics may have too many quality chefs that will demand minutes in their backcourt, with Rajon Rondo, Bradley and first-round draft pick Marcus Smart currently on the roster.

Second, Bradley has often been injured in his NBA career — missing 22 games in 2013-14 due to ankle issues and 31 games in 2012-13 due to shoulder surgeries.

"Avery had a good (2013-14 season)," Ainge told ESPN at the conclusion of this past season.

"I've seen improvement in Avery this year. The biggest issue with Avery has just been health. He plays hard, and he's had some injuries but none of them are injuries that should prevent him from being a great player.

The 23-year-old University of Texas product was drafted by the C's 19th overall in the 2010 NBA Draft and is known for his relentless defensive ball pressure.

Bradley averaged a career-high 14.9 points per game last season.

The Truth About Commonwealth Charters

Students, parents, and taxpayers deserve schools that work for all…

1. True public schools educate all types of students. Commonwealth Charter schools do not.
2. True public schools enroll and keep students at all grades. Commonwealth Charter schools do not.
3. Though set up as laboratories of innovation, to date charter schools have offered few innovations.
4. The ratio of children who have special needs and who are English Language learners at Commonwealth Charter schools is far less than that in the BPS.
5. True public schools do not push out or counsel out students just prior to MCAS season. Nor do they evict students just prior to graduation.
6. Commonwealth Charter schools drain limited resources that could be better spent on our entire school population, not just a select few.

The students who are most disadvantaged and most costly to educate remain in urban districts while scarce resources are being drained from their budgets. All children deserve equity and access to a quality education.

Our state aid is down more than $60 million over 12 years...

1. In FY 15, Chapter 70 will account for 11% of the district's funding, down from 31% fifteen years ago. Although Commonwealth Charter schools serve only 13% of the Boston student population, they get over 50% of the Chapter 70 state aid. Keep the city's resources in public schools that educate and welcome all students.
2. Our schools require more resources to maintain and to provide adequate services to all children. BPS parents shouldn't have to resort to bake sales to keep their art teacher or their physical education teacher.

Instead of lifting the cap we ought to require current charter schools to educate all students and fill empty seats from their wait lists. True public schools fulfill the needs of a democratic society. Commonwealth Charter schools do not.

(*BPS students, too, have more severe special needs on average than those students in Commonwealth Charter schools.)
